Political Psychology

Government 370L (38624)

GAR 1.134, Tuesdays and Thursdays, 330pm-500pm

<https://utexas.instructure.com/courses/1183016>

Syllabus date: November 12, 2016 (12:32 Noon)

This course is about ideas in psychology and their applications to politics. It has three parts.

The first part is about obedience, conformity, social pressure, and authoritarianism. These are old and important topics, but they do not often get an airing in political psychology courses. They should. In this part of the course, we will also take up some new and general research about personality and its connection to politics.

The second part is about how people interpret new information about politics and use it to update their beliefs. In this vein, we will talk about different ways in which media and savvy politicians can manipulate citizens, the surprising persistence of false beliefs about politics, and whether people can use “information shortcuts” to compensate for their lack of direct information about policies.

The third part of the course takes up group influences on political behavior, partisanship and ideology, and prejudice and racial campaigning (e.g., the “race card”). These topics may seem unrelated, but I hope to convince you that they are connected by several common threads.

Exams, Grading, and Absences

There will not be a final exam.

There will be three in-class exams. They are not cumulative; that is, each exam will cover a distinct set of topics. The first exam will count for 35% of your final grade; the second, for 35%; the third, for 30%. See below for the dates of the exams.

You may handwrite or type your exams. If you know that you want to type but will not have a laptop computer, please notify me as early in the semester as possible.

For the exams, you need to know the last names of all of the authors whose works are assigned in this course. If I ask about Milgram, you need to know what Milgram did. If I describe Milgram's experiments, you need to know that Milgram is the man who designed them.

Final paper option. You may write a final paper of 6 to 9 pages instead of taking the third exam. If you want to take this option, you must let me know by e-mail no later than November 17th. You will be required to write in response to one of at least two (and perhaps only two) prompts. The prompts will be distributed sometime on November 24th, and your paper will be due at 1159pm on December 1st. Do not send it by e-mail; instead, upload it to Canvas.

Syllabus exam. There will also be a special in-class exam during the first fifteen minutes of class on September 8th. It will not be on the course material per se. Instead, it will be on the rules, guidelines, and ideas in this syllabus. You may refer to this syllabus as you take the exam, but to do well, it will help to have read the entire syllabus in advance.

If you score a 90 or above on the syllabus exam, your final grade for the semester will not be affected. If you score between 75 and 90, I will subtract two points from your final grade. If you score below 75, I will subtract five points from your final grade, and I will ask you to drop the course.

Exam pickup policy. To ensure the confidentiality of your grade, I will never leave your exam in a mailbox or give it to a friend.

Exam regrades. If you think that your exam has been graded in error, talk to me within ten days of the date on which exams were handed back in class.

Historically, the only successful regrade requests have been requests that students justify with reference to specific passages in the assigned reading. And if there are particular passages or other points that you want me to consider as I regrade your exam, you should send them to me by e-mail. I will not read handwritten explanatory notes.

If I regrade your exam, your grade may go down.

EXAM ABSENCES

If you are absent from an exam and do not have a good reason, your absence will not be excused. You'll get a 0 for the exam. Think ahead. If you know that you are going to miss an exam, do not take the course.

Baptisms, bar mitzvahs, bat mitzvahs, births, job interviews, weddings, and extracurricular activities (athletic or not) are never sufficient reasons for absence from an exam.

Please do not ask a coach to ask me that your absence from an exam be excused because you had to practice, play, or travel for a game. It won't make a difference to me, and you will be wasting the coach's time.

If you miss an exam and your absence is excused, you will need to take a make-up exam. There will only be one make-up exam for each regular exam, so make your arrangements as soon as possible. Send email to me to set a make-up time.

MOST EXAM GRADING WILL BE BLIND

Except for the syllabus exam, all exams will be graded blind. I will not know your exam grades until I calculate your overall grade for the semester.

TRANSLATION OF NUMBERS INTO LETTER GRADES

All of the grades that you receive in this course will be numbers. But I need to report letter grades to the Registrar's Office. This is how I will translate numbers into letter grades: below 60 = F, 60 to 63 = D-, 63 to 67 = D, 67 to 70 = D+, 70 to 73 = C-, 73 to 77 = C, 77 to 80 = C+, 80 to 83 = B-, 83 to 87 = B, 87 to 90 = B+, 90 to 93 = A-, 93 and above = A.

GRADES WILL BE CURVED

At least 40% of students will receive an A- or an A on each exam and for an end-of-semester grade. To make this happen for any particular exam, I will calculate the raw score (out of 100) for the student at the 40th percentile of the grade distribution. Let this score be s . I will add $\min\{0, 90 - s\}$ points to this student's score, bringing it to 90. I will add the same number of points to every other student's score. I will use the same procedure to adjust the end-of-semester grades.

I will not use a similar procedure to adjust grades downward. The percentage of students receiving an A- or an A will not be capped; it may be higher than 35%.

GRADES WILL NOT BE ROUNDED UP

For example, if your final grade is 89.9, I will report a B+ to the Registrar's Office.

Office Hours

Office hours will take place on most Wednesdays from 115pm to 415pm. They will be held at my office: Batts Hall, Room 3.136. You do not need to make an appointment in advance, but I prefer that you do. Making an appointment also reduces the probability that you will need to wait while I'm meeting with other students.

You cannot sign up for my office hours through Canvas. Instead, please make appointments through <https://www.slotted.co/2016fall>. When you make an appointment, please add a comment indicating what you would like to talk about when we meet.

If all office-hours slots are full—you can tell by checking the slotted.co site—I generally will not be able to meet with you during or immediately after office hours.

Prerequisite

Parts of the course require you to multiply and divide simple fractions without using a calculator. (Paper and pencil are fine.) Example: $\frac{17}{4} \times \frac{11}{3}$.

Questions That You Should Not Ask

I like to take questions, including naive questions. (Naive questions may be excellent questions.) I do not expect that you already know any of the material that we cover in this course. I also expect that you will be confused at times, and clarifying questions about confusing points are always in order. But there are a few questions that you should not ask. See <http://johnbullock.org/teaching/badQuestions.pdf> for details. Reviewing that document is a requirement of this course.

Readings

Required readings are marked with an asterisk. The other readings in the syllabus are recommended but not required.

There is one required book: Stanley Milgram's Obedience to Authority, ISBN 978-0-06-176521-6. The assigned chapters will not be online. The book will not be available from the UT Co-op Bookstore. You must obtain a copy—and soon, because it is assigned very early in the semester. There are several excellent online bookstores, and I recommend that you order a copy from one of them immediately. "It was out of stock" is not an adequate excuse for not having the book.

I expect to make small changes to the reading list throughout the term. Whenever I make changes especially worth noting, I'll send an announcement via e-mail.

FINDING THE READINGS

There is no packet of course readings. You should print or acquire them yourself. Most of them are available online, either from URLs that are given in this syllabus or from the course website. If there is no URL in the syllabus and the course website doesn't have the article, please search for it online. You are responsible for locating every one of the assigned readings.

I find most of the course readings (except those available through Canvas) by searching Google Scholar via <https://scholar-google-com.ezproxy.lib.utexas.edu>. I recommend that you start your searches with that URL.

You may need to use an on-campus computer or to connect through the UT-Austin VPN to download the articles. If you don't know what a VPN is, see <http://www.utexas.edu/its/vpn/>.

WHAT WE WON'T COVER THIS YEAR

It's a big field, and we cannot have units on each important topic. To my mind, five omissions stand out: we will not have units on ideology, priming, Bayesian updating, status quo bias and "system justification," or "myopic retrospection" in political judgments. (We have a unit on what political scientists call "priming," but social psychologists mean something different by the term, and we have no unit that corresponds to priming in the social psychology sense.) If you have questions about these topics, feel free to ask me about them outside of class.

BACKGROUND IN SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY

If you want background reading in psychology that is not explicitly political but that informs much of what we cover in this course, try these texts:

Kunda, Ziva. 1999. Social Cognition: Making Sense of People. Cambridge, Massachusetts: MIT Press. Dated but clear and useful. Note that many books share the title Social Cognition. This book and the next are the ones that you want.

Hamilton, David L., ed. 2005. Social Cognition. New York: Psychology Press.
Thirty-eight important articles from the intersection of social and cognitive psychology.

BACKGROUND READINGS IN STATISTICS

There is no statistics prerequisite, but many of the assigned articles use simple statistics. If you want to better understand the statistical methods that you encounter in the articles, I recommend:

Freedman, David, Robert Pisani, and Roger Purves. 1998. Statistics. 3rd ed. New York: W. W. Norton. Presumes almost no background. A few chapters are assigned for the first class and are available from the class web site. There is now a fourth edition; I haven't read it.

Freedman, David A. 2009. Statistical Models: Theory and Practice. Revised ed. New York: Cambridge University Press. This is better than Statistics but also more advanced. Chapters 1-5 are excellent for self-study if you do the exercises.

Angrist, Joshua D., and Jörn-Steffen Pischke. 2014. Mastering 'Metrics. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press. The focus is on the application of quantitative methods to practical problems. Excellent.

No Teaching Assistant

There is no teaching assistant for this course.

Accommodation for Disabilities

If you are disabled, you may ask for accommodations from the Division of Diversity and Community Engagement, Services for Students with Disabilities (512-471-6259, <http://www.utexas.edu/diversity/ddce/ssd/>).

August 25 (R): Overview; Obedience

*This syllabus. If you cannot read it before the first class, that's OK. But please read all of it before class on the 30th. Among other things, reading this syllabus may make you realize that you do not want to take this course.

August 30 (T): Obedience

We will watch Milgram's documentary of the Yale obedience studies. Note the explanation of Milgram's procedure. Focus on the way in which people obey even as they protest.

The authors use a field and a survey experiment to estimate the parameters of a structural model. This is outside the scope of our course, but it's a very interesting idea. Note that "social pressure" here consists largely of asking people for money face-to-face.

September 8 (R): Syllabus Exam and an Interlude on Causal Inference in the Social Sciences

The exam will be given in the first fifteen minutes of class. See the "Exams" section of this syllabus for more details.

Interlude: How do we know whether X causes Y? We'll explore this topic and related topics, largely by reviewing the logic of randomized experiments. I'll also speak about how causal inferences are drawn from nonexperimental data. If you don't understand the ideas in this class, there are important respects in which you won't understand the rest of the course.

My aim is not to teach you how to use particular methods but to give you enough information to help you understand what you'll see in the readings. (What I do here is no substitute for a course in statistics or econometrics, which everyone who wants to be a better social-science student should take.)

*Freedman, David A. 2005. Statistical Models. New York: Cambridge University Press. Chapter 1. Do not be fooled by the title: this is exciting and it requires no background in statistics.

*Angrist, Joshua D., and Jörn-Steffen Pischke. 2009. Mostly Harmless Econometrics. Princeton. Chapter 2. Chapter 1 is also highly recommended. If you reach Chapter 1 and are confused by the discussion of FUQs, see <http://www.mostlyharmlesseconometrics.com/2012/11/938/>.

September 13 (T): Interlude: When Can You Trust the Social Sciences?

Not as often as you would like. Most published research findings are false. Most social scientists are too optimistic about their ability to discover general truths about people.

But don't surrender. There are guidelines that can help you distinguish good studies from bad ones. Some of these guidelines are easy to follow. I mentioned some of them in the previous class; I'll mention more of them in this class.

But there are major problems. This editorial will give you a sense of how the system works, with heavy emphasis on the problems. Don't worry if the first paragraph confuses you or if you don't always understand the aspects of the peer-review process that the authors are describing. Do identify and try to understand their main criticisms of the process.

September 22 (R): Exam 1

September 27 (T): To Be Determined

September 29 (R): Motivated Reasoning

*Lord, Charles. G., Lee Ross, and Mark R. Lepper. 1979. "Biased Assimilation and Attitude Polarization: The Effects of Prior Theories on Subsequently Considered Evidence." Journal of Personality and Social Psychology 37 (November): 2098-2109. Each of the authors is a superb scholar, and this article is often considered a classic in the motivated reasoning literature. But it is actually quite flawed, and in lecture, I'll explain its flaws. Understanding them will help you to understand the very deep problems in much (not all) of the motivated reasoning literature.

*Cohen, Geoffrey L., Joshua Aronson, and Claude M. Steele. 2000. "When Beliefs Yield to Evidence: Reducing Biased Evaluation by Affirming the Self." Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin 26 (9): 1151-1164. <http://psp.sagepub.com/content/26/9/1151>. You may skip Study 3. There is one big idea that I want you to get from the article, and you don't need to read Study 3 to get it.

Miller, Arthur G., John W. McHoskey, Cynthia M. Bane, and Timothy G. Dowd. 1993. "The Attitude Polarization Phenomenon: Role of Response Measure, Attitude Extremity, and Behavioral Consequences of Reported Attitude Change." Journal of Personality and Social Psychology 64 (April): 561-74. A strong challenge to the apparent Lord, Ross, and Lepper (1979) findings of attitude polarization (but not to their findings on biased assimilation).

Gentzkow, Matthew, and Jesse M. Shapiro. 2006. "What Drives Media Slant? Evidence from U.S. Daily Newspapers." University of Chicago. Manuscript. <http://www.nber.org/papers/w12707>. This is not, strictly speaking, a political psychology article. But it does a very nice job of showing why the Lord, Ross, and Lepper (1979) data are not, in fact, evidence of biased assimilation. (See especially page 286, note 8. You can think of this article as expanding on the "herbal remedies for cancer" argument that Lord, Ross, and Lepper (1979) give at the end of their article.)

SELECTIVE EXPOSURE TO INFORMATION

The idea that people selectively expose themselves to information that is likely to confirm their prior beliefs is one aspect of motivated reasoning. It has proved controversial in the past, especially where politics is concerned. But evidence in favor of political selective exposure seems to be mounting.

October 6 (R): Heuristics and Cues

Most people know very little about politics. An important question in political psychology is whether they can nevertheless make good political decisions. That is a large part of what we'll discuss today.

*Lupia, Arthur. 1994. "Shortcuts versus Encyclopedias: Information and Voting Behavior in California Insurance Reform Elections." American Political Science Review 88 (March): 63-76. <http://www.jstor.org/stable/2944882>.

*Somin, Ilya. 1998. "Voter Ignorance and the Democratic Ideal." Critical Review 12 (4): 413-58. <http://www.informaworld.com/smpp/content~content=a791282780~db=all>. A useful polemic. Focus on Part II, in which Somin argues against the idea that cues can substitute for more direct knowledge of politics and policies.

Gigerenzer, Gerd. 1996. "On Narrow Norms and Vague Heuristics: A Reply to Kahneman and Tversky (1996)." Psychological Review 103 (July): 592-96. Gigerenzer may be the foremost critic of the Kahneman-Tversky work on heuristics.

Popkin, Samuel L. 1994. The Reasoning Voter: Communication and Persuasion in Presidential Campaigns. 2nd ed. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. Some of this is bad—cf. the "tamale heuristic"—but it remains an accessible and influential statement of the view that cues are "information shortcuts" and are, on balance, a good thing.

Conlisk, John. 1996. "Why Bounded Rationality?" Journal of Economic Literature 34 (June): 669-700.

Kahneman, Daniel, Paul Slovic, and Amos Tversky, eds. 1982. Judgment under Uncertainty: Heuristics and Biases. New York: Cambridge University Press. Thirty-five articles about heuristics and biases. Some are classics. The average quality is high.

Plott, Charles R., and Kathryn Zeiler. 2007. "Exchange Asymmetries Incorrectly Interpreted as Evidence of Endowment Effect Theory and Prospect Theory?" American Economic Review 97 (September): 1449-66. The endowment effect is typically attributed to the "anchoring and adjustment" heuristic, which we will discuss today.

October 11 (T): Framing

"Framing" has two very different meanings. Psychologists chiefly study "equivalence framing." Political scientists chiefly study "issue framing." You need to understand the distinction.

October 13 (R): Prospect Theory

*Quattrone, George A., and Amos Tversky. 1988. "Contrasting Rational and Psychological Analyses of Political Choice." American Political Science Review 82 (September): 719-36. <http://www.jstor.org/stable/1962487>. Skip the "decision weights" part of the article. Not because it is wrong, but because the idea is poorly explained. I'll talk about it in class.

Kahneman, Daniel, and Amos Tversky. 1979. "Prospect Theory: An Analysis of Decision Under Risk." Econometrica 47 (March): 263-92. <http://www.jstor.org/stable/1914185>. This article made prospect theory famous and did more than any other to help Kahneman win a Nobel Prize. It overlaps a lot with Quattrone and Tversky (1988).

Arceneaux, Kevin. 2012. "Cognitive Biases and the Strength of Political Arguments." American Journal of Political Science 56 (April): 271-85.

Weaver, Ray, and Shane Frederick. 2012. "A Reference Price Theory of the Endowment Effect." Journal of Marketing Research 49 (October): 696-707. Most people who study prospect theory think that the endowment effect is due to loss aversion. The authors argue that it is instead due to "aversion to bad deals," where "bad" depends on your frame of reference. See <http://goo.gl/yy0qMI> for a brief introduction to the paper.

Polman, Evan. 2012. "Self-Other Decision Making and Loss Aversion." Organizational Behavior and Human Decision Processes (November): 141-50. The author's argument is that we are less loss-averse when making decisions for others than when making decisions for ourselves. The finding holds even in situations of riskless choice.
